

Have A Drink

There isn't a whole lot that needs to be said. As I have read some of the literature about the historic relationship between Italy and Germany, and commented on the involvement of the Papacy relating to the sanctioning and authorization by the Vatican of the Ethiopian Holocaust through Mussolini, it is not surprising that these things still occur today. At the helm in the Vatican, presently, is one known to be a Hitler supporter. Hate continues to ooze out. Please take note of all the murderers the wine symbolizes. It is considered "spirits." So, this drink should be for or in honor of those murdered, or in honor of those that committed the murders, If I am not mistaken. Whatever the celebration, it can't be cheers. Is this communal wine? Is this what was meant by saving the European economy.....again?

Italian Company Makes Hitler Wine

Wines often have interesting artwork or out-of-the-box branding on their labels to make the bottles stand out. But one Italian wine company has gone overboard, creating what some consider the most offensive wine label ever produced.

According to Eater, an Italian wine company called Vini Lundardelli, located in Udine, Italy, sells wines with images of Hitler and other Nazis on its labels. The line of wines is titled "Linea Storia," or the "line of history." The Hitler bottles are part of this historical line, which is explained on the website as reminding, "us of the lives of celebrated personages of Italian and world political history such and Che Guevara, Churchill, Francesco Giuseppe, Gramsci, Hitler, Marx, Mussolini, Napoleon, and Sissi."

The site also states that the historical line has, "become a cult object among collectors." The wines began getting attention stateside after an American lawyer saw a bottle with Hitler on the label during his vacation in Italy. A local Italian paper explained the exchange between attorney Matthew Hirsch and the wine shop owner, who stated, "the bottles were part of history like Che Guevara."

The bottles have offended many people and the Italian government is looking into the matter. In a statement to the press, Italian integration minister Andrea Riccardi said, "This offends the memory of millions of people and risks comprising the image of Italy abroad." The wine has now been removed from the shop where Hirsch originally saw it, and local prosecutors have begun an investigation of the wine.
